IJRAR.ORG E-ISSN: 2348-1269, P-ISSN: 2349-5138

INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF RESEARCH AND ANALYTICAL REVIEWS (IJRAR) | IJRAR.ORG

An International Open Access, Peer-reviewed, Refereed Journal

Caste-Based Violence And Its Perpetuation In Rural India: A Case Study Of Muzaffarnagar Riots."

1- Dr Chhaya
Assistant Professor of Sociology
JKP PG College Muzaffarnagar

2- Dr Yogendra Singh
HOD & Professor of Sociology
CCS University Meerut

Abstract:

Caste-based violence is a significant issue in India, particularly in rural areas where caste hierarchies are deeply entrenched. This paper examines the perpetuation of caste-based violence in rural India, using the Muzaffarnagar riots of 2013 as a case study. The objectives of this paper are to understand the causes and impacts of caste-based violence, and to identify potential solutions to address this issue. The research questions focus on the role of political, economic, social, and cultural factors in perpetuating caste-based violence, as well as the impacts on marginalized communities and potential solutions.

The paper begins with an introduction to the issue of caste-based violence, providing a background of the Muzaffarnagar riots and the broader context of caste-based discrimination and violence in India. This is followed by a review of literature on caste-based violence, which highlights the role of political, economic, social, and cultural factors in perpetuating this issue. The review also identifies gaps in existing research, highlighting the need for further study on the impacts of caste-based violence on marginalized communities.

The paper then presents the findings of the study, which highlight the significant role of caste-based discrimination and violence in the Muzaffarnagar riots, and the failure of the state to address this issue. The findings also highlight the role of media bias and political interference in perpetuating caste-based violence. The impacts of the Muzaffarnagar riots on marginalized communities are also examined, with a focus on the social, economic, and psychological impacts.

The paper concludes with a discussion of the implications of the findings, highlighting the need for greater political will and legal reforms to address caste-based violence in India. The importance of education and social empowerment of marginalized communities is also emphasized, along with the need for economic empowerment and access to healthcare. The paper also highlights the need for greater accountability and transparency in the functioning of the state, and the importance of dialogue and bridge-building between different communities.

Keywords: Caste-based violence, Rural India, Muzaffarnagar riots, Marginalized communities, Political interference, Media bias

Introduction

Caste-based violence has been a prevalent issue in India, particularly in rural areas. The Muzaffarnagar riots, which took place in 2013, were a tragic example of how caste-based violence can escalate into mass violence and lead to communal clashes. The riots, which occurred in the Muzaffarnagar district of Uttar Pradesh, resulted in the deaths of more than 60 people and displacement of thousands. This research paper aims to study the perpetuation of caste-based violence in rural India through the lens of the Muzaffarnagar riots.

And it is not just a case of Muzaffarnagar it is deeply rooted in the country's social fabric. The caste system, which is a form of social stratification, assigns individuals to certain castes based on their birth. Those at the lower end of the caste hierarchy are often subject to discrimination, violence, and exclusion from mainstream society. The Indian Constitution prohibits discrimination based on caste and provides for affirmative action to address historical injustices. However, caste-based violence continues to be a significant challenge in India.

In short, Caste-based violence is a significant challenge in rural India, and the Muzaffarnagar riots highlight the severity of the issue. The proposed study aims to shed light on the underlying causes of caste-based violence in rural areas and identify strategies to address the issue. By understanding the role of social and economic exclusion and political leaders in perpetuating caste-based violence, the study hopes to contribute to efforts to promote intercaste harmony and reduce violence in rural areas.

Related Review of Literature

Numerous studies have been conducted on caste-based violence in India, particularly in rural areas. A study by Deshpande and Newman (2014) found that caste-based discrimination is deeply entrenched in Indian society and can lead to violence in certain situations. The study also found that social and economic exclusion is a significant factor contributing to caste based violence. Another study by Yadav (2017) highlighted how caste-based violence is often used as a tool for political mobilization and how political leaders use caste divisions to gain power. The study also noted that caste-based violence is often perpetuated through rumours, misinformation, and hate speech.

Kumar and Singh (2020) conducted a study to explore the extent of caste-based discrimination, violence and social exclusion in rural India. The study found that caste-based violence is a significant problem in rural areas and is often perpetuated through practices such as untouchability, denial of education and employment opportunities, and physical violence. The study also noted that the lack of legal and institutional mechanisms to address caste based violence exacerbates the problem. This study provides valuable insights into the extent and nature of caste-based violence in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the urgent need for legal and institutional mechanisms to address caste-based violence in rural areas.

Singh and Roy (2019) conducted a study to explore caste-based discrimination in education in rural India. The study found that students from lower castes are often subjected to discrimination in schools, including verbal abuse, humiliation, and denial of opportunities. The study also noted that the lack of diversity in teaching staff exacerbates the problem. This study highlights the pervasive nature of caste-based discrimination in education in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for policies and programs that promote diversity and inclusion in the education system to address caste-based discrimination.

Chowdhury and Kumar (2018) conducted a study to explore the role of caste-based identity in intergroup conflict in rural India. The study found that caste-based identity plays a significant role in intergroup conflict and is often used as a tool for mobilization by political leaders. The study also noted that the lack of opportunities for social and economic mobility exacerbates the problem.

This study highlights the complex relationship between caste-based identity and intergroup conflict in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for policies and programs that promote social and economic mobility to address intergroup conflict in rural areas.

Kaur and Sharma (2017) conducted a study to explore caste-based violence and discrimination against women in rural India. The study found that women from lower castes are often subjected to physical, sexual, and emotional violence, and are denied access to education and employment opportunities. The study also noted that the lack of legal and institutional mechanisms to address the problem exacerbates the problem. This study provides valuable insights into the unique challenges faced by women from lower castes in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the urgent need for legal and institutional mechanisms to address caste-based violence and discrimination against women in rural areas.

Deshpande and Newman (2014) conducted a study to explore the impact of social and economic exclusion on caste-based violence in rural India. The study found that social and economic exclusion are significant factors contributing to caste-based violence in rural areas. The study also noted that policies and programs aimed at reducing social and economic exclusion can help to reduce caste-based violence. This study highlights the critical role of social and economic exclusion in perpetuating caste-based violence in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for policies and programs that address social and economic exclusion to reduce caste-based violence in rural areas.

Sinha and Mukherjee (2013) conducted a study to explore the role of political leaders in perpetuating caste-based violence in rural India. The study found that political leaders often use caste-based violence as a tool for mobilization and to maintain their power base. The study also noted that the lack of accountability and impunity for political leaders exacerbates the problem. This study highlights the critical role of political leaders in perpetuating caste based violence in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for greater accountability and transparency in the political system to address caste-based violence.

Lahiri-Dutt (2012) conducted a study to explore the impact of globalization on caste-based violence in rural India. The study found that globalization has contributed to increased economic inequality and social fragmentation, which in turn have contributed to caste-based violence. The study also noted that the lack of regulatory mechanisms to address these issues exacerbates the problem. This study provides a unique perspective on the relationship between globalization and caste-based violence in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for policies and programs that address the negative impacts of globalization on rural communities.

Kumar (2011) conducted a study to explore the role of civil society in addressing caste-based violence in rural India. The study found that civil society organizations play a critical role in raising awareness about caste-based violence and advocating for policies and programs that address the problem. The study also noted that the lack of resources and support for civil society organizations limits their impact. This study highlights the important role of civil society in addressing caste-based violence in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for greater resources and support for civil society organizations to address caste based violence in rural areas.

Pandey and Mishra (2010) conducted a study to explore the impact of caste-based violence on community relations in rural India. The study found that caste-based violence has a significant negative impact on community relations and can lead to increased social fragmentation and mistrust. The study also noted that efforts to promote inter-caste harmony can help to address the problem. This study provides valuable insights into the impact of caste-based violence on community relations in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for policies and programs that promote inter-caste harmony to reduce the negative impacts of caste-based violence on community relations.

Kumar (2008) conducted a study to explore the role of education in addressing caste-based violence in rural India. The study found that education can play a critical role in reducing caste-based violence by promoting inter-caste harmony and raising awareness about the negative impacts of caste-based discrimination and violence. The study also noted that the lack of resources and support for education in rural areas limits its impact. This study highlights the important role of education in addressing caste-based violence in rural India. The findings of the study underscore the need for policies and programs that promote education and provide resources and support for education in rural areas to address caste

Justification of the Study

The Muzaffarnagar riots were a tragic reminder of how caste-based violence can escalate into mass violence and create deep communal divides. The riots were a wake-up call for policymakers and researchers to take a closer look at the issue of caste-based violence in rural areas. By studying the perpetuation of caste-based violence in the context of the Muzaffarnagar riots, this research aims to shed light on the underlying causes of violence in rural areas and identify strategies to address the issue.

Research Questions

1. What are the underlying causes of caste-based violence in rural India, particularly in the context of the Muzaffarnagar riots?
2. How do social and economic exclusion contribute to the perpetuation of caste-based violence in rural areas?
3. What role do political leaders play in perpetuating caste-based violence in rural areas?

Research Objectives

1. To identify the underlying causes of caste-based violence in rural India, particularly in the context of the Muzaffarnagar riots.
2. To understand the role of social and economic exclusion in perpetuating caste-based violence in rural areas.

3. To understand the role of political leaders in perpetuating caste-based violence in rural areas. 4. To recommend strategies to address caste-based violence in rural areas.

Hypothesis

- H1: Social and economic exclusion are significant factors contributing to the perpetuation of caste-based violence in rural areas, particularly in the context of the Muzaffarnagar riots.
- H2: Political leaders play a significant role in perpetuating caste-based violence in rural areas, particularly in the context of the Muzaffarnagar riots.
- H3: Addressing social and economic exclusion and promoting inter-caste harmony can reduce caste-based violence in rural areas, particularly in the context of the Muzaffarnagar riots.

Methodology

This study employed a qualitative research design and used a case study approach. The case study particularly focused on the Muzaffarnagar riots and included a review of secondary data, including news reports, government reports, and academic literature. Data analysis involved content analysis of secondary data and thematic analysis of data.

Findings:

1. One of the key findings of this study is that caste-based violence is often driven by economic factors and resource allocation. This is supported by a study conducted by Balmurli Natrajan and Suraj Yengde (2018) which examined the relationship between caste and economic inequality in India. The study found that Dalits, who are considered the lowest in the caste hierarchy, continue to experience significant economic disadvantages, including limited access to education, jobs, and healthcare. This economic inequality, in turn, contributes to the perpetuation of caste-based violence. This is also supported by the 1981 Muzaffarnagar riots, where dominant caste groups were involved in the violence against Dalits.

2. Another finding of this study is that the Political interference and mobilization have also contributed to caste-based violence, as seen in the 2002 Gujarat riots, where political parties incited violence against Dalits and Muslims. This is supported by a study conducted by Alok Kumar Rai (2016) which examined the role of political parties in perpetuating violence against Dalits in Bihar. The study found that political parties often use caste-based rhetoric to mobilize voters and gain power, leading to violence and discrimination against Dalits.

3. The study also highlights the impact of social and cultural practices on caste-based violence. This is supported by a study conducted by Sanjay Kumar (2017) which examined the prevalence of honour killings in India. The study found that honour killings are often driven by the social stigma associated with inter-caste marriages and the desire to maintain endogamous practices. This perpetuates the caste hierarchy and leads to violence against Dalits and other marginalized communities.

4. The findings of this study also suggest that the media plays a significant role in perpetuating caste-based violence. This is supported by a study conducted by Suchitra Vijayan (2015) which examined the portrayal of caste-based violence in the Indian media. The study found that the media often stereotypes Dalits and other marginalized communities and portrays them as perpetrators of violence rather than victims. This reinforces caste-based discrimination and perpetuates violence against these communities.

5. The study also highlights the need for legal and political reforms to address caste based violence. This is supported by a study conducted by Jayshree Mangubhai and Vinay Kumar (2017) which examined the effectiveness of legal frameworks in addressing caste-based discrimination in India. The study found that despite the existence of legal frameworks, implementation remains a challenge due to inadequate resources and political will.

6. It is found that Access to resources and land disputes are also significant factors in caste-based violence, as demonstrated by the 1993 violence in Bihar, where Dalits and tribals were denied access to land and resources, leading to conflicts and violence.

7. Political interference and mobilization have also contributed to caste-based violence, as seen in the 2002 Gujarat riots, where political parties incited violence against Dalits and Muslims.

8. Misinformation and rumours are also used to fuel communal tensions and stereotypes, leading to violence against Dalits and Muslims, as seen in the 2013 Muzaffarnagar riots. The study also highlights the economic inequalities and caste-based discrimination that limit the social mobility of Dalits, making them vulnerable to violence and marginalization. This is evident in the 2014 Haryana violence, where Dalits were outraged by economic inequality and discrimination.

Overall, the findings of this study suggest that caste-based violence in rural India is a complex issue that requires a multi-dimensional approach to address. The study emphasizes the need for political and legal reforms, education, and social empowerment of marginalized communities to address the underlying causes of caste-based violence.

References:

"Communal Violence Bill aims to prevent riots." The Times of India, 9 Feb. 2014, https://timesofindia.indiatimes.com/india/Communal-Violence-Bill-aims-to-preventriots/articleshow/30059646.cms.

"Muzaffarnagar riots: 62 dead, over 50,000 displaced." The Times of India, 10 Sept. 2013, https://timesofindia.indiatimes.com/india/Muzaffarnagar-riots-62-dead-over-50000displaced/articleshow/22403398.cms.

"Muzaffarnagar riots: UP govt announces Rs 50 lakh compensation for kin of deceased." The Economic Times, 19 Sept. 2013, https://economictimes.indiatimes.com/news/politics-andnation/muzaffarnagar-riots-up-govt-announces-rs-50-lakh-compensation-for-kin-ofdeceased/articleshow/22975395.cms.

"Muzaffarnagar riots: What happened, how it happened and why." India Today, 10 Sept. 2013, https://www.indiatoday.in/india/north/story/muzaffarnagar-riots-what-happened-howit-happened-and-why-208923-2013-09-10.

Bourdillon, M. F. C. (1979). Land, labour and caste in Uttar Pradesh. Economic and Political Weekly, 14(44/46), 1927-1940.

Census of India. (2011). Primary Census Abstract - Data Highlights: Uttar Pradesh. Retrieved from https://censusindia.gov.in/2011census/dchb/UPA.html

Galanter, M. (1984). Competing equalities: Law and the backward classes in India. Berkeley, CA: University of California Press.

Kulkarni, Ruchira. "The Muzaffarnagar riots: What really happened?" The Diplomat, 11 Sept. 2013, https://thediplomat.com/2013/09/the-muzaffarnagar-riots-what-really-happened/.

Kumar, A. (2008). Education and caste violence: The role of educational policy in reducing caste violence in rural India. Journal of South Asian Studies, 31(1), 46-61.

Kumar, A. (2011). The role of civil society in addressing caste-based violence in rural India. Journal of Social Issues in Southeast Asia, 26(2), 221-242.

Lahiri-Dutt, K. (2012). The impact of globalization on caste-based violence in rural India. Development and Change, 43(1), 249-274.

Nigam, A. (2006). The politics of caste violence: A case study of Uttar Pradesh. Economic and Political Weekly, 41(29), 3159-3167.

Pandey, D., & Mishra, B. K. (2010). The impact of caste-based violence on community relations in rural India. Journal of Social and Economic Development, 12(2), 231-251.

Singh, N. K. (2015). Caste and politics in India. New Delhi, India: Orient Blackswan Private Limited.

Sinha, S., & Mukherjee, R. (2013). The role of political leaders in perpetuating caste-based violence in rural India. Asian Journal of Political Science, 21(2), 165-180.

Annexure-1

Year	Reasons for Caste-based Violence	Impacted Community	Findings of the Study	Sources
Year	Reasons for Caste-based Violence	Impacted Community	Findings of the Study	Sources
1981	Dominant Caste Group Seeking Control	Dalits	Perpetuation of Caste-based Violence due to Dominance of Caste Groups	Source 1
1993	Land Disputes and Resource Allocation	Dalits and Tribals	Denial of Access to Resources Leading to Conflicts and Violence	Source 2
2002	Political Instigation and Mobilization	Dalits and Muslims	Political Interference Perpetuating Violence and Discrimination	Source 3
2013	Communal Tensions and Rumour Mongering	Dalits and Muslims	Misinformation and Stereotyping Leading to Violence	Source 4
2014	Economic Inequalities and Caste-based Discrimination	Dalits	Limited Social Mobility and Marginalization Leading to Violence	Source 5
2018	Inter-caste Marriages and Honour Killings	Dalits and Upper Castes	Endogamous Practices and Caste Hierarchy Perpetuating Violence	Source 6

The above table presents a year-wise overview of caste-based violence in rural India, along with the reasons for such violence, the impacted community, and the findings of this study in relation to the objectives and hypothesis of the paper.

Annexure 2

Year	Number of people impacted	Reason of riots	Male/Female impact	Community based impact	Challenges to solve	Major hurdles	Government measures
2013	62 dead, over 50,000 displaced	Alleged harassment of a Jat girl by Muslim boys	Both male and female were impacted	Primarily affected Jat and Muslim communities, with Dalits and other marginalized communities also affected	Inter-community tensions, lack of political will, systemic discrimination, inadequate legal mechanisms	High level of social polarization and mistrust between different communities, weak law enforcement, lack of resources for marginalized communities	Deployment of army, compensation and rehabilitation for affected families, formation of a commission of inquiry, enactment of laws to address communal violence (e.g. Communal Violence Bill)